MAN WHO TRIED TO BLOW UP THE UMBRIA CAUGHT

Rousseau Had New Infernal Machine When Captured.

CARRIED IN A GRIP.

Identified as Cunard Plotter and Man Who Menaced Frederick Statue.

HUNTED FOR TWO YEARS

Police Believe He Can Clear the Mystery of Lost Liner Naronic.

Gessler Rousseau, who had a complex infernal machine in his possession when he was arrested yesterday by the Philadelphia police, after he had offered for $500 to take a relative of missing Owen Kelly to a place in this city, where he said certain Irish societies were keeping Kelly a prisoner, is the same man who shipped an infernal machine to the Cunard liner steamer Umbria on May 8, 1903, and to capture whom the authorities of this city and the Cunard line people spent thousands of dollars.

The photograph of Rousseau was also identified by three persons in Washington this afternoon as that of the man who placed a bomb on the fence surrounding the statue of Frederick the Great recently.

All about the identity of the Philadelphia man with the author of the Umbria outrage was removed to-day when a picture of Rousseau was released in this city by Inspector McCuskey and sent at once to Mrs. Currie, in whose boarding-house at No. 36 West Thirty-first street, the man who shipped the box to the Umbria lived for weeks before he disappeared.

"It's the same man," said Mrs. Currie, the moment she saw the picture. "I would know him among a thousand. His face is engraved on my memory in a way that makes me positive."

Will Go to See Him. Mrs. Currie will be taken to Philadelphia either to-day or to-morrow to see Rousseau. After that Rousseau will probably be brought to this city as the claims of the New York authorities on the man are greater than those of any one else.

To clinch the identification of the picture of Rousseau Inspector McCuskey had Peter Dillon and Frank Butts, ex-prisoners of No. 37 Ninth avenue, summoned to Police Headquarters to-day. These are the men who brought Rousseau's trunks and baggage to Mrs. Currie's house when he first arrived from Chicago. They positively identified the picture. Later in the day Peter Bathe, of No. 53 West Thirtieth street, and Joe McCormick, of No. 42 Ninth avenue, the two men who took the infernal machine from Mrs. Currie's house to the Cunard pier at Rousseau's order, will be at Police Headquarters to look at the photograph.

The moment the New York police got news of the arrest of the Philadelphia Rousseau they were convinced he was the man for whom they literally swept the country two years ago. There were too many points of similarity for them to have any doubt on the subject, and they were not surprised when Mrs. Currie identified the photograph.

Mystery in the Case.

The man who spent months in making the elaborate machine which went to the Cunard pier was known in the various parts of the country as Roscoe, Russell and Rousseau, and besides, the description of the police had of him tallied exactly with that of the man under arrest in Philadelphia.

What Rousseau meant to do with the infernal machine he had in his possession when arrested yesterday is not yet clear to the police of Philadelphia, but there has always been considerable doubt whether he ever really meant to blow up the Umbria. If he did he overlooked the most important part of the mechanism of his machine, for he neglected to attach fulminate of mercury caps to the dynamite in the box, and although the machine was operating

MRS. B. L. DUKE TELLS STORY OF HER MARRIAGE

Says Her Texas Lands Are a Menace to the Tobacco Trust.

HER'S LOVE MATCH.

Was Reluctant to Accept Proposal at First, She Asserts, but Has Been Happy Since

DUKE STARTS INQUIRY.

Shocked by Disclosures Made Concerning His Wife He Asks Lawyer to Investigate Charges.

Mrs. Brodie L. Duke, at the office of Levy & Unger this afternoon, gave out the following statement:

"I was originally a promoter in Chicago with Mr. Charles M. Taylor. I became interested in Texas tobacco fields and have developed them to such an extent that I have become a menace to the Tobacco Trust. It is for that and that reason alone that the Duke family has endeavored to separate me from my husband.

"I can prove at any time that my tobacco fields are in splendid shape, and that I have already raised a big crop there.

"My troubles came from the moment I came here and tried to get some one with capital to help me develop these lands. I went to Clarence Master and a Mr. Thompson and asked them to suggest some one. They suggested the Duke family and I refused because I had no use for trust people.

Telegraphed to Brodie Duke. "Then they said that Brodie L. Duke was outside of the Trust and that he was a practical tobacco man. So I telegraphed Mr. Duke at Durham asking him to come and see me in New York. He came as soon as possible, and after we had gone well over the ground he agreed to finance the undertaking.

"Three days after we met he asked me to marry him. I refused but he never quit bothering me until Dec. 13, when I married him.

"In the mean time I asked him to sign an agreement with me that I would have no interest in his property if he should die save what came out of my Texas ventures. He refused to make an agreement, saying that his children would not have a chance to better me, as he would give me stocks and bonds during his life sufficient to provide for me after his death.

Says She Was Reluctant. "Although Mr. Duke insisted that I become his wife, I was disposed to think twice before taking such a step because he had been twice married and had four children. He reassured me, saying: 'I believe in you. If ever my children try to make trouble, don't fear, for I never forsake my wife.' On Dec. 13, the day of our marriage, we spent most of the time down town. We visited the office of Collector of Internal Revenue, B. B. Moore, of Bully & Co., and other business men.

At the moment of the marriage we called on Mr. C. W. Thompson, and he went to the church with us and I went to say that I have never been so happy in my life as I have been since I married Mr. Duke.

Trouble with Daughters. "It is true that Mr. Duke had trouble with his daughters, Pearl and Mabel, about our marriage. He told the girls they could receive me or not as they liked, but that he would never give me up.

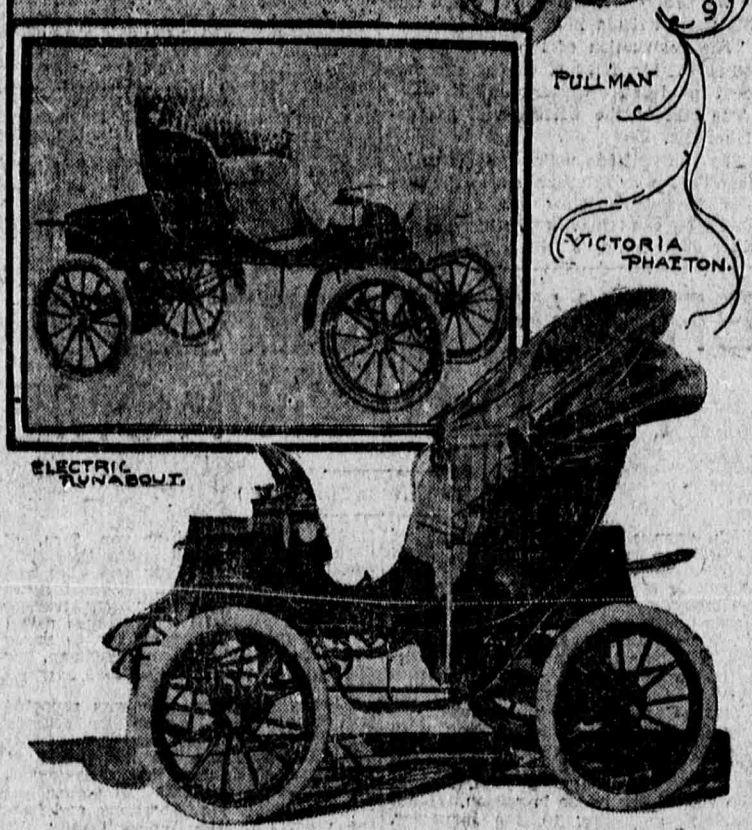

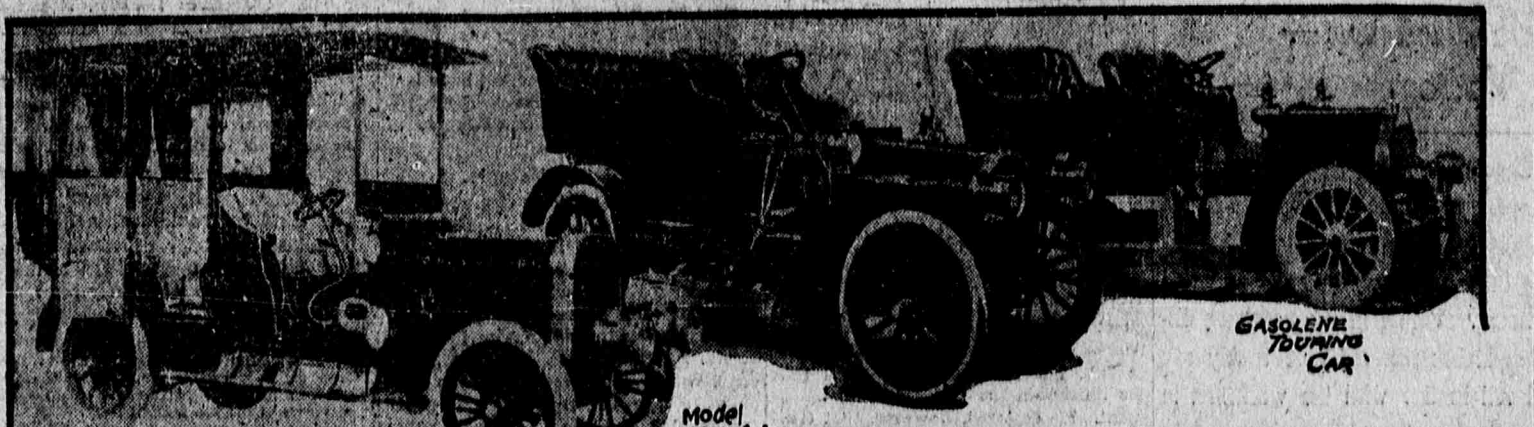

"About myself I want to say I was born in Buffalo, N. Y., and that I came here with my maid. It was here that I met Mr. Duke. My mother was Helen E. Chapman, daughter of a professor of languages in the University of New York. My father was William Webb, and it was after his death that I went to Chicago.

William Webb arrived in Chicago in 1897. I obtained a divorce from him a year ago on the ground of his marrying a woman named Hopkins, of Buffalo."

A "Girlhood Scrape." "Yes, that was a girlhood scrape. I ran away with him in 1895. Then I regretted the step and sued for divorce to end the matter. I was only a girl and the case was thrown out of court, leaving me free."

"Did you ever have anything to do with Mabel Masterdon?" "That was the shooting scrape. Mabel Masterdon was attorney for Don Louis Fuller, a railroad builder, who, before he went abroad in 1890, left some valuable securities in his care. Masterdon, who was in Mexico, heard of this and (Special to The Evening World.) NEW ORLEANS, La., Jan. 14.—Local race-goers had a touch of real winter to-day, the early morning temperature being near the freezing point. The cold affected the attendance to some extent, but a holiday crowd of liberal proportions visited the track, and the speculation was lively. Scratches were few and the Gentilly Handicap and the Overnight Handicap had good fields and furnished keen betting. The track had dried out considerably.

"I was full of holes and had spots, except on the outside, where for a matter of two feet the going afforded steady footing. It was a case of the path again, and only the horses that had speed to get there early had a winning chance."
